There are many reasons why a cookie could not be set correctly. Below are the most common reasons:

- You have cookies disabled in your browser. You need to reset your browser to accept cookies or to ask you if you want to accept cookies.
- Your browser asks you whether you want to accept cookies and you declined. To accept cookies from this site, use the Back button and accept the cookie.
- Your browser does not support cookies. Try a different browser if you suspect this.
- The date on your computer is in the past. If your computer's clock shows a date before 1 Jan 1970, the browser will automatically forget the cookie. To fix this, set the correct time and date on your computer.
- You have installed an application that monitors or blocks cookies from being set. You must disable the application while logging in or check with your system administrator.

Why Does this Site Require Cookies?

This site uses cookies to improve performance by remembering that you are logged in when you go from page to page. To provide access without cookies would require the site to create a new session for every page you visit, which slows the system down to an unacceptable level.

What Gets Stored in a Cookie?

This site stores nothing other than an automatically generated session ID in the cookie; no other information is captured.

In general, only the information that you provide, or the choices you make while visiting a web site, can be stored in a cookie. For example, the site cannot determine your email name unless you choose to type it. Allowing a website to create a cookie does not give that or any other site access to the rest of your computer, and only the site that created the cookie can read it.

Australia formally known as the Commonwealth of Australia is a nation made up of the mainland of the Australian Continent, Tasmania Island, and many other smaller islands. It is the sixth biggest state by total area in the world and it is bordered by East Timor, Indonesia and Papua New Guinea to the north, Vanuatu and the Solomon Islands to the north-east, and New Zealand to the south-east. The people in Australia wanted to govern their own country, and not get orders from London. The governors were elected by London and soon the settlers started demanding for more democracy and a local government. As a result, the New South Wales Legislative Council was established in 1825 to give advice to the Governor of New South Wales. Donkeys were brought to Australia by the British in the latter half of the nineteenth century as they colonised the land in their search for land and minerals. Great teams of donkeys hauled goods across the outback and were instrumental in the success of the vast pastoral stations in some of the harshest areas of the continent. However, with the advent of motorised transport in the 1930s, they were no longer economically viable and were set free to fend for themselves (Bough 2008). "From value to vermin: a history of the donkey in Australia“. Australian Zoologist 33 (3):388 – 397 Bough J. 2008. Value to vermin: The donkey in Australia. PhD, Newcastle University. Carrick, D., D. Thomson, and G. Calley. The donkeys and dixers of Australian politics. Finally we leave you with three political D-words that Australia has gifted to the rest world. There is the donkey vote, where voters allocate preferences in the order in which candidates’ names appear on the ballot paper, giving the top-listed candidate an advantage. We can compare this with kangaroo ticket, a political expression not known in Australia but used by Americans to describe a situation where the vice-presidential candidate has more appeal than the presidential candidate. Kangaroos have more weight in their bottom halves, and they also propel themselves using their back legs. Sorting the roosters from the feather dusters. As our pollies hit the hustings, you might be interested to know that husting is the oldest political term in English.
